

INFORMATION FOR TRAVELERS ON PROHIBITED ITEMS:

TSA needs the help of the traveling public in reducing the number of prohibited items brought to airport screening checkpoints. TSA recognizes that most passengers who carry prohibited items do so without any ill intent. TSA does not impose fines on the vast number of passengers who inadvertently carry prohibited items. Dealing with any prohibited item, however, adds time to the screening process both for the traveler who brought the item and for other travelers as well. Some items pose such a risk to the traveling public and the screening workforce that TSA will consider imposing a fine on the traveler. Items for which fines may be imposed include firearms, ammunition, explosives, and certain dangerous knives. Fines also may be imposed when passengers attempt to artfully conceal prohibited items or behave in a manner that is so uncooperative and disruptive that it physically interferes with the screening process.

Individual Sanctions

This TSA policy directive provides sanction guidance for imposing civil penalties up to $10,000 per violation for all “persons,” including individuals, when a determination is made that civil penalty enforcement action should be taken.¹ This sanction guidance is being issued to assist TSA personnel on the appropriate application of penalties under TSA’s present civil penalty authority.
